How does a major Western practice become involved in putting their knowledge to use in the developing world? FeildenCleggBradleyStudios, well known across the British architectural world, provide a spirited example. In 2005, after the death of FCB Studios co-founding partner Richard Fielden, his widow, Tish Feilden and fellow original founding partner, Peter Clegg, set up the Richard Feilden Foundation with the three-fold focus of integrating architecture and education in projects on the African continent.

Here Peter Clegg writes about the exhilarating experiences that both FCB Studios projects, and those of the Foundation have resulted in so far
